FOOD & DRINK

The cuisine of Shirak Province reflects the history and geography of the region with incorporated external influences. In the high, mountainous parts, the food is based on meat and milk products with simple but tasty dishes. The most traditional meals consist of khorovats (grilled meats), basturma (a highly seasoned, air-dried raw beef), eggs with beans, fresh salad made of tomatoes and cucumbers, various pickles, chechil panir (braided and pickled string cheese), homemade butter, matzoon (yoghurt), tan (a sour milk drink prepared by diluting yogurt with cold water), lavash (flat bread) and honey. Shirak is known as the homeland of khash, a heavy dish made of cow's feet, although other cow parts, such as the head and stomach (tripe) may also be used. Formerly a nutritious winter food, it is now considered a delicacy, and is enjoyed as a festive meal, usually early in the morning.
